Your Value System

The result of all your connected values.

8 parts · discussion and one exercise · run it yourself

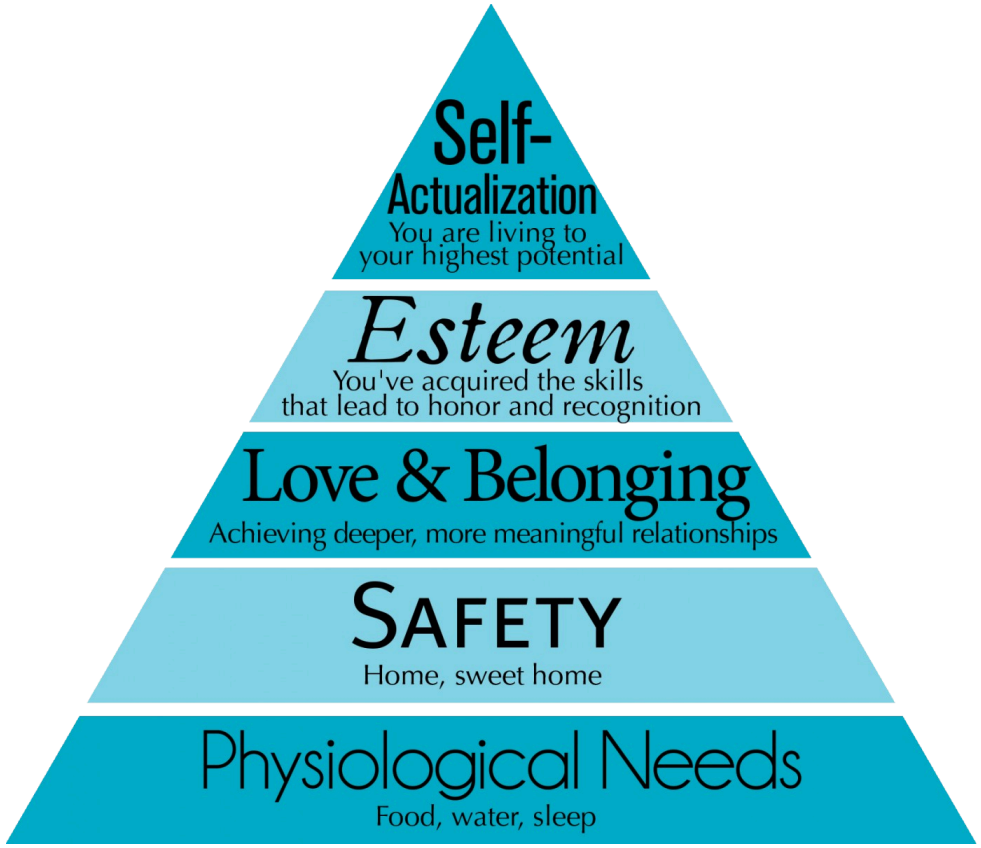

REFERENCE MODEL

Value Systems are not exact Science but there are models trying to explain them

ASK THE ROOM

Questions? Thoughts?

Where does the pyramid start?

Maslow's "Hierarchy of needs"

System Values of the World Economic Forum

The World Economic Forum is applying the System Value framework to drive dialogues and programs which aim to accelerate the clean energy transition.

System values framework

CONCEPT

Every human has one value system with different sections and subsections

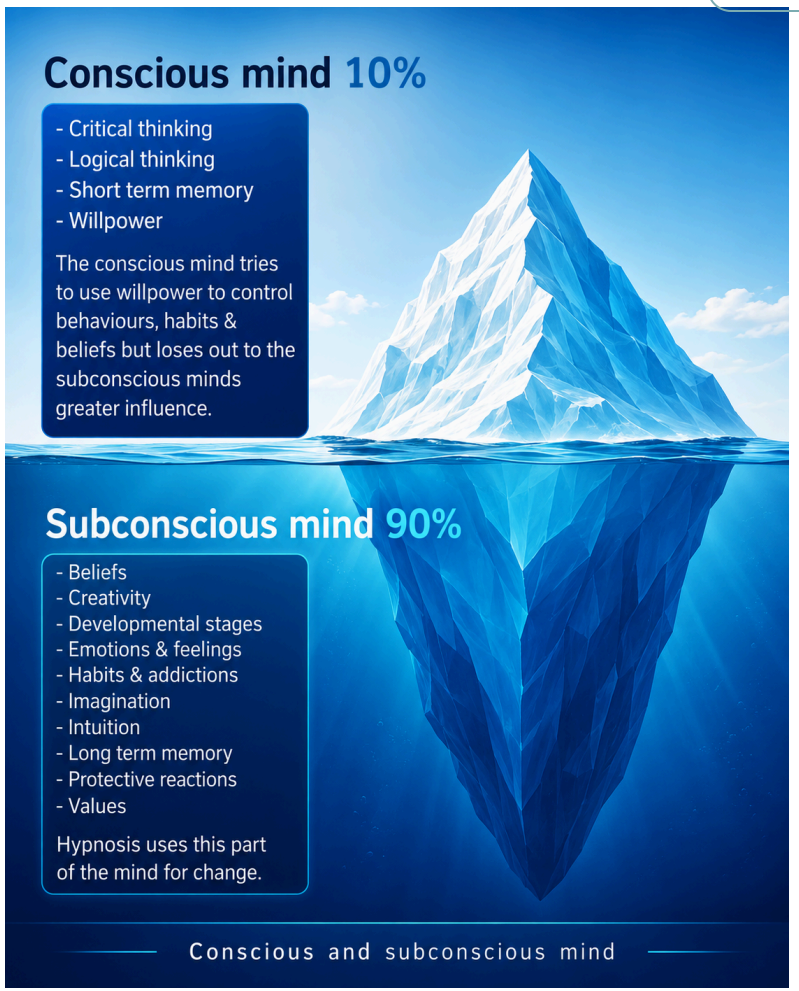

The importance of every section changes depending on factors like: your age, which time of the day it is, with who you spend time, where you are and much more.

Humans tend to put more value into what they do not have.

DISCUSSION

We are not aware of big parts of our value system.

The Question is: Are we led by our value system or do we create our value system?

Conscious and subconscious mind

> TAKE 1 MINUTE TO THINK
> Questions? Thoughts?

CONCEPT

It is hard to create or change a Value.

Starter Pack:

- Time
- Endurance / Perseverance
- Strategy

Jordan Peterson said

“…to a large degree you discover them.”

Watch what you’re interested in, focus on what feels best

Four steps.

You don’t have to control your value system, but you can try to focus on the helpful values.

1. Become aware of your Value System
2. Question your Value System
3. Discover Values that interest you and feel good
4. Focus on those Values and follow them

EXERCISE

Build a character.

It can be made up or it can be real, and try to map out the complete value system of the character. Including the conscious AND the unconscious parts.

FACILITATOR

Take it, change it, keep what works.

This module is built to be run without us. Adapt the wording to the age and size of your class. If you would rather we ran it with you, ask.

Reference models are cited, not endorsed: the hierarchy of needs after Maslow, and the system-value framework of the World Economic Forum.
