Your Value System

You value things that matter to you. A value can be almost anything: an activity, a symbol, kindness, teamwork, winning, fairness, peace, money, sport.

> Anything can hold value if you see it that way. If you already know what to write, go straight to question 1.

Stuck? Look for:

1. Things that are important to you
2. Things you like
3. Things you do not like
4. Things often on your mind
5. Things that affect your life strongly

QUESTION 1

What is the most important value you have?

Example: I like playing video games.

QUESTION 2

Why do you have this value? Where did it come from?

Example: Because I can build, explore, feel capable and be with friends online.

QUESTION 3

How does this value affect your everyday life? What about it helps you, and what gets in the way?

Example: I do not go outside much so I burn easily, but my reflexes and hand-eye coordination are good.

PART TWO

Value systems in the open

> It is hard to name someone's value system exactly. What you can see are behaviours that show parts of it in public.

- A scientist doing research, making discoveries
- Someone committed to a religion, a mindset, a possession
- A fan of a sport, a scene, a product
- A politician trying to change something
- A parent keeping a family safe and provided for

Every one of these patterns carries different values, expressed through what the person takes responsibility for.

Pick two of these. Write down three values you would expect each to hold, and one value they would probably deny having.
